ABSTRACT

Statistics classifying American colleges and universities according to their educational functions and missions are included. Rather than creating a hierarchy, this information groups institutions by shared characteristics. Changes in higher education are portrayed, and a continued growth in institutions of higher education is noted. There are tables with enrollment data and definitions of institutions of higher education. Statistics are given for doctorate-granting institutions (research universities I and II and doctorate-granting colleges and universities I and II); comprehensive universities and colleges I and II; liberal arts colleges I and II; two-year community, junior, and technical colleges; and a variety of specialized institutions (religion and theology, medical schools, other health professions, engineering and technology, business and management, law schools, teachers colleges, corporate-sponsored colleges, art, music, and design). Information is provided on the state in which each institution is located and the status of the institution (public or private) as well as the number of schools in each state and enrollment data. A classification index of universities and colleges is provided. (SM)

FOREWORD

by Ernest L. Boyer

The Carnegie Classification of higher education groups American colleges and universities on the basis of their missions and educational functions. This classification was developed in 1973 by Dr. Clark Kerr primarily to improve the precision of the Carnegie Commission's research. A second edition appeared in 1976. Over the years, the system has gained credibility and served as a helpful guide to scholars and researchers.

Higher education is ever changing, and new institutional adjustments may, in the future, require changes in our classifications. However, this 1987 edition holds to the basic categories as defined by Dr. Kerr. By keeping the definitions relatively constant, we are able to portray changes in higher education that have occurred in the intervening years.

Perhaps the most consequential trend in this report is the continued growth of the nation's higher learning institutions. Since 1976, overall student enrollment has increased 10 percent. The largest growth has been in the two-year colleges (14 percent). The community college movement, which has contributed so uniquely to the nation, continues to be especially responsive to adults engaged in lifelong learning.

Among the four-year institutions, the enrollment increase in private higher education (13 percent) has been more than double the growth in the public sector (6 percent). We note with satisfaction that America's independent colleges have shown remarkable resiliency during a period when many observers were predicting their decline.

We also found that during a decade called the "era of retrenchment," 484 new colleges have been launched. Of these, 314 are community, junior and technical colleges and 147 are specialized institutions. Sixteen are liberal arts colleges and one new institution offers the doctorate degree. This growth was offset somewhat by 167 institutions that merged, closed, or otherwise were no longer qualified for inclusion in the listing. Still, the net gain was 317.

The latest Carnegie profile also reveals what some have called in higher education an "upward drift." For example, there has been, since 1976, an increase in the number of universities classified as Research and Doctorate-Granting. Significantly, the growth was greater in the private than the public sector.

At the same time, we found a small decline in the number of liberal arts colleges. In the 1976 report, there were 583 such institutions; in 1987 the number is 571. Many of the Liberal Arts II colleges have been reclassified as Comprehensive, and many more, while continuing to be classified as liberal arts, have changed missions by expanding their vocational and professional offerings.

Also reflecting the trend toward occupational training is the growth in the number of Specialized institutions—from 559 in 1976 to 643 today. This expansion reflects many new colleges that offer programs in such fields as business, engineering, and technology. There has been a strong surge in religious studies, too.

Here an important caveat should be noted. While the overall number of liberal arts colleges declined, those classified as Liberal Arts I—highly selective institutions that offer over half of their degrees in arts and science fields—have increased from 123 to 142. Further, overall enrollment at these institutions has gone up from 154,000 to 191,000. All of this suggests that colleges with a strong liberal arts tradition and with great pulling power have not made major curriculum adjustments in response to market place demands.

Significantly, a new subcategory, Corporate Education, has been added to the Carnegie classification. Twenty-two accredited degree-granting institutions operating within industry and business are so designated. At the same time, we have dropped a previously existing category, Institutions for Nontraditional Study.

In summary, this latest classification reveals a healthy and expanding network of higher learning institutions in the nation. Voices of gloom and predictions of decline are not supported by the trends. Americans, perhaps as never before, believe in our system of higher education, one that is closely tied to the economic and social vitality of the nation and to the private hopes of students and their families. Colleges and universities in the United States have an amazing capacity to respond creatively to new conditions and to continually adapt. This system, accomplished without a national "master plan," is one of our most remarkable achievements.

We also note with satisfaction that diversity is alive and well. For example, the balance between the private and public sectors has, since 1976, remained relatively constant and, in spite of earlier trends and dark predictions, the independent colleges in America have shown resiliency and growth. We urge that public policy continue to acknowledge the contributions of both sectors.

Of special interest is the continuing expansion of Research and Doctorate-Granting institutions. But our concern is that quality be maintained. America must continue to support a core of world-class research centers which are essential to the advancement of knowledge and to human achievement, too. But such activity is costly, and it is crucial that we have available the fiscal as well as human resources needed to sustain an expanding network of institutions devoted to scholarly research.

One of the most fascinating trends of the past decade has been the shift of liberal arts colleges to the category called Comprehensive. This change reflects, in some measure, an imaginative strategy to meet the vocational needs of students. Still, a balance must be struck. There is, within the tradition of the liberal arts, a commitment to the intellectual quest, the use of reason, and respect for values unrelated to market demands. These "internal imperatives" that greatly enrich the career interests of students must also be sustained and strengthened.

We find it significant that a new category, Corporate Education, has been added. Business-based education is, today, one of the fastest growing sectors, offering students accredited degrees. While established colleges have much to learn from the corporate classroom, the danger is that, in a bid for survival, colleges and universities will seek to imitate corporate education. If that happens, traditional higher education, having abandoned its own special mission, will find itself in a contest it cannot win.

Finally, it should be a cause for concern that we have so few colleges that are unapologetically experimental. After World War II there was a network of nontraditional institutions in this nation, colleges that had prestige among peers and took pride in their educational innovations. Today that network has largely disappeared. Educators speak often of diversity within the academy, but it is also true that when it comes to standards and procedures the rules from campus to campus are pretty much the same. Without sacrificing academic excellence there is, we feel, an important place for institutions that introduce new strategies and test creatively new assumptions.

One final point. This classification of colleges and universities is not intended to establish a hierarchy among higher learning institutions. Rather, the aim is to group institutions according to their shared characteristics, and we oppose the use of the classification as a way of making qualitative distinctions among the separate sectors. We have in this country a rich array of institutions that serves a variety of needs. We celebrate the diversity, acknowledging that our system of higher education is the envy of the world. Indeed, America's network of colleges and universities is strong precisely because we have avoided a unitary model, and, in the days ahead, our goal must be continuously to promote both excellence and diversity in higher education.

Unlike Tables 3 and 5 which display change in raw count totals for each classification category, this table displays unique institutional shifts from each 1976 classification category to selected 1987 classification categories.

Example: A total of 24 institutions that were classified as Research II in 1976 changed category: 16 moved to Research I, 7 moved to Doctorate I, and 1 moved to Doctorate II.

DEFINITIONS

The 1987 Carnegie classification includes all colleges and universities in the United States listed in the 1985-86 Higher Education General Information Survey of Institutional Characteristics. It groups institutions into categories on the basis of the level of degree offered—ranging from prebaccalaureate to the doctorate—and the comprehensiveness of their missions. The categories are as follows:

Research Universities I: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs, are committed to graduate education through the doctorate degree, and give high priority to research. They receive annually at least $33.5 million in federal support[1] and award at least 50 Ph.D. degrees each year.[2]

Research Universities II: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs, are committed to graduate education through the doctorate degree, and give high priority to research. They receive annually between $12.5 million and $33.5 million in federal support for research and development[1] and award at least 50 Ph.D. degrees each year.[2]

Doctorate-Granting Universities I: In addition to offering a full range of baccalaureate programs, the mission of these institutions includes a commitment to graduate education through the doctorate degree. They award at least 40 Ph.D. degrees annually in five or more academic disciplines.[2]

Doctorate-Granting Universities II: In addition to offering a full range of baccalaureate programs, the mission of these institutions includes a commitment to graduate education through the doctorate degree. They award annually 20 or more Ph.D. degrees in at least one discipline or 10 or more Ph.D. degrees in three or more disciplines.[2]

Comprehensive Universities and Colleges I: These institutions offer baccalaureate programs and, with few exceptions, graduate education through the masters degree. More than half of their baccalaureate degrees are awarded in two or more occupational or professional disciplines such as engineering or business administration.[3] All of the institutions in this group enroll at least 2,500 students.[4]

Comprehensive Universities and Colleges II: These institutions award more than half of their baccalaureate degrees in two or more occupational or professional disciplines, such as engineering or business administration, and many also offer graduate education through the masters degree.[3] All of the colleges and universities in this group enroll between 1,500 and 2,500 students.[4]

Liberal Arts Colleges I: These highly selective institutions[5] are primarily undergraduate colleges that award more than half of their baccalaureate degrees in arts and science fields.[3]

Liberal Arts Colleges II: These institutions are primarily undergraduate colleges that are less selective[5] and award more than half of their degrees in liberal arts fields.[3] This category also includes a group of colleges (identified with an asterisk) that award less than half of their degrees in liberal arts fields but, with fewer than 1,500 students, are too small to be considered comprehensive.

Two-Year Community, Junior and Technical Colleges: These institutions offer certificate or degree programs through the Associate of Arts level and, with few exceptions, offer no baccalaureate degrees.

Professional Schools and Other Specialized Institutions: These institutions offer degrees ranging from the bachelor's to the doctorate. At least 50 percent of the degrees awarded by these institutions[2] are in a single specialized field. Specialized institutions include:

Theological seminaries, Bible colleges and other institutions offering degrees in religion: This category includes institutions at which the primary purpose is to offer religious instruction or train members of the clergy.

Medical schools and medical centers: These institutions award most of their professional degrees in medicine. In some instances, their programs include other health professional schools, such as dentistry, pharmacy, or nursing.[6]

Other separate health profession schools: Institutions in this category award most of their degrees in such fields as chiropractory, pharmacy, or podiatry.

Schools of law: The schools included in this category award most of their degrees in law. The list includes only institutions that are listed as separate campuses in the Higher Education General Information Survey.

Schools of engineering and technology: The institutions in this category award at least a bachelor's degree in programs limited almost exclusively to technical fields of study.

Schools of business and management: The schools in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in business or business-related programs.

Schools of art, music, and design: Institutions in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in art, music, design, architecture or some combination of such fields.

Teachers colleges: Institutions in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in education or education-related fields.

Other specialized institutions: Institutions in this catagory include graduate centers, maritime academies, military institutes without liberal arts programs, and institutions that do not fit any other classification category.

Corporate sponsored institutions: These institutions are accredited, degree-granting colleges and universities established by profit-making corporations.[7]

NOTES ON DEFINITIONS

1. The years used in calculating average federal support were 1983, 1984, and 1985.
2. The academic year for determining the number of degrees awarded by institutions was 1983-84.
3. The Liberal Arts disciplines include area studies, biological science, the fine arts, foreign languages, letters, mathematics, physical sciences, psychology, the social sciences, and interdisciplinary studies. Occupational/pre-professional disciplines include agriculture, the natural sciences, architecture and environmental design, business and management, communications, computer and information science, education, engineering, the health professions, home economics, law, library science, public affairs, and theology.
4. The years used for calculating average student enrollment were 1982, 1983, and 1984.
5. An index developed by Alexander W. Astin at the University of California at Los Angeles is used to determine the selectivity of liberal arts colleges.
6. This category lists only institutions that appear in Higher Education General Information Survey as separate campuses. Those seeking a complete listing of accredited professional schools should consult publications of the separate professional associations such as the annual report on medical education published by the American Medical Association.
7. Our list of corporate colleges and universities is taken from Eurich, Nell P., Corporate Classrooms: The Learning Business (Princeton, N.J., The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, 1985). Since that report was published some of the institutions it included have become independent or part of other institutions.

TECHNICAL NOTES

The Carnegie Classification utilizes survey data from the Department of Education's Higher Education General Information Surveys (HEGIS), the National Science Foundation (NSF), the Higher Education Research Institute (HERI) located at the University of California at Los Angeles, and the 1987 Higher Education Directory published by Higher Education Publications, Inc. (hep).

The 1985-86 HEGIS Institutional Characteristics of Colleges and Universities survey provided the universe of postsecondary institutions in the early stages of this project. This survey provides institutional data for 3,388 institutions and 128 system/central offices, and includes information on terminal occupation, two-year, liberal arts, teacher preparatory, or professional programs in each college and university.

In the final phase of this project, the 1985-86 Institutional Characteristics data base was used to identify schools that were either new or had gone out of business. The hep directory was used to verify institutional name changes. The Degrees and Other Formal Awards Survey conducted by HEGIS for the 1983-84 academic year was the source of information on the numbers of first professional, baccalaureate, masters, and doctorate degrees awarded by major field of study at 3,275 colleges and universities.

Opening fall enrollment figures were needed to identify institutions in the Comprehensive Colleges and Universities I category. These data were provided by the 1982, 1983, and 1984 HEGIS surveys entitled Fall Enrollment in Institutions of Higher Education.

For both categories of research universities, data on the average federal support for universities and colleges for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985 were available from the National Science Foundation's annual report called Federal Support to Universities, Colleges, and Selected Non-Profit Institutions.

Criteria for both liberal arts categories utilized combined Verbal and Mathematics Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores and earned degree information. Average SAT data were collected by and obtained from the Higher Education Research Institute (HERI). HERI tabulated SAT scores from such publications as Lovejoy's College Guide. In cases where the composite American College Testing Program (ACT) score was reported, the institute converted the score into an estimated SAT composite. Where no information was available for a given institution, the SAT composite was imputed using the mean change from the previous (or succeeding) year for similar colleges and universities. The distinction between a Liberal Arts I and Liberal Arts II college is based on the SAT composite score of entering freshmen.

Two-year colleges and institutes were identified by the highest program offering reported in the 1985-86 Institutional Characteristics survey described above.

Professional schools and other specialized institutions were grouped according to the relative degree output by major discipline field. Earned degree data collected in the 1983-84 HEGIS survey were utilized for this purpose.
